× Salary exchange could affect an employee's future entitlement to certain state benefits, including the receipt of taxoned is.

If an employee's earnings were to fall below a certain level (currently £6,396 per year) then that employee would no longer be eligible for:

- x statutorysickpay
- x statutorymatemity, patemity or adoption pay
- x incapacity benefit
- x jobseeler's allowance
- X Taxcedits depend on family income and circumstances and they are administered by HMRC. More information about the possible effect of salary exchange on the amount of taxcedits is available by calling the HMRC help line: 0845 300 3900
- X If not enough NIC is paid on earnings, an employee's state pension entitlement benefits may be reduced on retirement so this needs to be considered too. The HMRC website contains a useful prediction tool: Checkyour State Pension forecast - GOV.UK (vww.gov.uk)
- X Salary exchange should not reduce an employee's earnings to a level which is less than the national minimum wage which means that, for anyone earning less than about £ 18,000 per year for a full-time job, care should be taken when considering a salary exchange scheme.
- X For some individuals, such as those earning less than the annual tax fiee earnings limit (the so called 'personal allowance'), the making of pension payments via a salary exchange scheme might be less tax efficient than the more traditional 'net pay' method used to date for members of our defined contributions demes.
- X There is a very low isk that choosing to switch to a salary exchange method of making persion contributions could have a detainental impact on the amount of bonowing that the employee might be able to secure. Because the College provides a detailed breakdown of salary on payslips, and provides lenders with references which declare the original 'reference' salary levels, the risk is minimal. Nonetheless staff are advised to consider their probable future needs for loans, overdrafts, mortgages, credit cand limits, income protection insurance benefits and redundancy entitlements before making a switch

No Salary related benefits, such as life assurance are always based on the 'reference'
